A LEADER'S JOURNEY

"FROM CHARACTER TO SKILLS TO RESULTS"

SECTION 1: CHARACTER

Mark an X where you know whether a trait comes naturally to you or not. List someone you know and a character from a story as your role model.

TRAITS	NATURAL	STRUGGLE	FRIEND ROLE MODEL	CHARACTER ROLE MODEL courageous loyal generous honest kind sincere self-controlled peaceful patient determined perseverant
open-minded fair cooperative optimistic
one

Many and times, selfless characters can lead to spontaneous and money. Why? Because the person who looks character not only endangers themselves but the people around them. They sacrifice themselves for the greater good of the community they're trying to protect.

- They choose feelings over character.
- They choose popularity over character.
- They choose fear over character.

Character is the result of personal growth and development. The heart matters most because the heart will tell you the right more than anyone else. Someone can tell you what they think it is, and if the heart is full of good character, it will compel the person to do what's right.

Like a tree, the roots of character support our growth in life. Writing good roots, roots such as peer pressure, destructive habits, and ignorance can knock down a tree.

So, express yourself to people of character, do small daily actions to build your character, read books to grow your character, and always get back up when you get knocked down.

BUILDING CHARACTER

CHARACTER TRAITS

Mark an X where you know whether a trait comes naturally to you or not. List someone you know and a character from a story as your role model.

BRAINSTORM BUBBLE

HOW DO WE BUILD CHARACTER?

What is the Difference Between Empathy, Compassion, and Kindness?

Empathy is seeking to understand someone else's feelings.

Compassion is feeling the desire to help.

Kindness is the act of caring, being friendly, or being generous.

LOVE + EMPATHY = COMPASSION + KINDNESS

"Own It Leader" is leading, and loves starts with empathy, moves to compassion, and ends with kindness. When we love others, we do things for people who they don't deserve it; the greater the act of love is. Draw a line on the spectrum below to indicate your current ability to love others.

for many only if they deserve it honor roll barely in my spirit realm

Loving Wisely

What happens if you have love but not wisdom?

Are there situations in which we try to be kind, but we make things worse because we helped ourselves? Can you give an example?

How do we love others wisely?

The best and most beautiful things in the world cannot be seen or even touched; they must be felt with the heart.

ORGANIZING

Being organized increases clarity and efficiency. The exercise below helps prioritize what's important. Just because they're distractible doesn't mean they're not important.

The Eisenhower Box

URGENT	IMPORTANT	DELEGATE
Demanding due dates	Impressing others	Unnecessary emails
Meeting deadlines	Working hard	Unnecessary tasks
Reporting due dates	Planning	Unimportant tasks

Additional Tip: Keep the Eisenhower Box in an envelope organized, so it's easy to find when you need it.

LEADERSHIP SKILLS / SELF-AWARENESS

PERSONALITY AWARENESS

People are made differently. Sometimes, it's hard to accept differences because we're used to seeing people like us. As leaders, we're used to diversity and difference, and sometimes we have thoughts about what makes other people different. Some people are more outgoing than others, and some are more introverted. Diversity helps bring out our differences and respect each other. This is a big reason why we can benefit from the Enneagram Test. The Enneagram Test is highly recommended. You can find a simplified version of the assessment online. The Own It Personality Test, below, is instead a reminder: You are a combination of all four types of personality, not one. Instead of trying to fit into one category, own your own unique personality.

1. The "strong willed"

Gets things done, wants to give their best, and loves accompanying goals. Strengths: Efficient, Effective, Competitive, Disciplined.

2. The "Woo-hoo!"

Enjoys having fun with others, and making others feel good. Strengths: Sociable, Engaging, Fun.

3. The "Is Everyone Okay?"

Cares about others' well-being, making sure that the group is okay and tracking conflict. Strengths: Listening, Encouraging, Empowering, Loyalty.

4. The "Deep Thinker"

Enjoys delving deeper into issues. Strengths: Reflective, Deep Thinking, Problem Solving.

5. The "Code Breaker"

My code

To determine your code, put the personality traits blank, the second choice in the first column, and so on. Also, consider your 2-3 strengths associated with each personality type above. Then, if you want to add a strength not listed below, add it to the blank space.

The Art of Serenity: Navigating Anger With Grace

2023

© scout5812 · fiverr.com

— DR. CLARE ALBRIGHT, CLINICAL PSYCHOLOGIST

THE ART OF SERENITY: NAVIGATING ANGER with GRACE

What research says about managing anger successfully?

If you're looking to manage your anger more effectively, research findings might be helpful. Two key findings:

Cognitive behavioral therapy (CBT) can be an effective treatment for anger management. Research has shown that CBT, a type of therapy that focuses on identifying and changing negative thought patterns, can be an effective treatment for managing anger. CBT can help individuals learn to identify triggers for their anger, develop new coping skills, and reframe negative thoughts in a more positive way.

Mindfulness practices can help reduce anger and stress. Research has also shown that practicing mindfulness, such as through meditation or deep breathing exercises, can help reduce feelings of anger and stress. Mindfulness practices can help individuals learn to be more present in the moment, regulate their emotions more effectively, and develop a greater sense of self-awareness.

Remember, everyone's journey with managing their anger will be different and what works for one person may not work for another. It's important to be patient and persistent in finding strategies that work for you, and seeking support from a mental health professional can be a helpful step in that process.

Mindfulness techniques for mana- ging anger successfully

You have absorbed the reasons for your anger and the role of anger management. If you're looking for mindfulness techniques to help manage your anger, here are five techniques that might be helpful:

1. Deep breathing: Taking deep breaths can help regulate your emotions and bring your attention to the present moment. Try inhaling for four counts, holding your breath for four counts, and exhaling for four counts, repeating as needed.

2. Body scan: A body scan is a mindfulness practice that involves focusing your attention on different parts of your body, starting from your feet and working your way up to your head. This can help you come more aware of physical sensations and release tension in your body.

3. Visual imagery: Visualization techniques, such as imagining a calm scene or visualizing yourself letting go of anger, can help shift your focus away from negative thoughts and emotions.

4. Mindful walking: Mindful walking involves paying attention to each step you take, the feeling of your feet on the ground, and your surroundings. This can help you become more present in the moment and reduce feelings of anger and stress.

5. Loving-kindness meditation: Loving-kindness meditation involves sending well-wishes and positive thoughts to yourself and others. This can help cultivate feelings of compassion and empathy, which can in turn help reduce feelings of anger and resentment.

Remember, mindfulness techniques can be helpful tools for managing anger, but they're not a substitute for seeking support from a mental health professional. If you're struggling with managing your anger, don't hesitate to reach out for help.

SPOTLIGHT

Mika Tofukuji

I have been born and raised in a little town called Tofukuji-cho in Yamashina prefecture. Yamashina is famous for fruits, especially grapes. If you've ever traveled to Yamashina by train, one train, you might have seen a lot of grape vineyards that line the train tracks. Yamashina has lots of mountainous areas. There is an oyaji joke for this, "yama no naka ni kireba kireba". I kindly warn you not to tell it because nobody laughs, and sunlight and apparently the climate is also optimal for growing grapes.

However, Kofu is a basin of land between mountains. It gets so extremely hot and humid in summer that you feel as if you were a steamed dumpling, but on the other hand, Kofu is a very cold place in winter. It might sound like it's not the best place to grow grapes. Actually, Kofu used to grow vegetables and rice a long time ago. But one day, at the end of the Edo period, the local cooperative and Satoyoshi people, they came to an agreement to start growing grapes and selling grapes as a town business. Everybody started building grape trellises from the ground up. This is how Kofu decided. That was about sixty years ago.

Adventures in Materials

Section One:
Japan and Material Culture

Japan has an extraordinary ability to connect material to culture, and respect for tradition is woven through so much that we see here—the making of rice, wheat, rice, paper, tea, timber, lacquer, and more. A country that thrives on tradition, the people who spend their days honoring ‘the beauty of everyday’ live with a sense of reverence that is rare. I first visited Japan three times, helped along by research scholarships to study the art, tools and techniques unique to Japan—and on the last, did not return home.

Section Two:
Kintsugi and Material Cycle

My background is in the crafts, working in art and architectural conservation. I trained in carving and woodwork in the 1990s and studied art history and storia of many old buildings in the South of England, like Bath Abbey, Winchester Cathedral, and Oxford University. We rarely had a dull day at Westminster Abbey. I also worked on the tomb of a long-forgotten monk at Windsor Castle; I designed a new canopy for him that I never beyond recognition, at 10 Downing Street I fashioned a replacement for the Queen’s bust. The Prime Minister didn’t take a tumble when delivering his morning address.

During conversations in the tea room we talked about how to care for those historic spaces, seeking justification for our interventions and a rationale to keep them in good condition. Funds were short. All buildings that have lain in the same place for hundreds of years deserve some of the contributions of successive generations, and part of the reason why they read as beautiful is thanks to their patination, layers, variations and flaws.

These discussions about conservation philosophy are what led me to Kintsugi, the Japanese art of repairing broken pottery with gold. A traditional kintsugi mend takes a broken piece of pottery, which is cut or smashed to pieces—and uses urushi lacquer to transform it through repair. It is first cleaned with a mixture of water and wheat paste, then filled using lacquer and rice glue, before additional layers of lacquer are applied. Once the lacquer is applied to the join, finally, a micrometer of gold is dusted along the surface, and then polished. This ancient Japanese history is noted in the tea ceremony, the teachings of Sen no Rikyu and the development of the tea ceremony in the 16th century.

To learn more, I joined the Department of Craft Lacquer at Tokyo University of the Arts—seeing slowly from the scars scratched across the surface that it may yield only 300g in a year. It is not only rarity to cross my workbench; over the last four years I have used 300g of gold to repair broken pieces of pottery. I have used broken shards and strands grommed from the tail of a cat. We used burnishing tools made from the rubber teeth of sea urchins and polishing compound from powdered starfish. I spent hours peeling the spines from the edge, then offering up a pale, papery plash, only to receive a handful of indigo beetles shell. I came to Japan a vegan, I’m afraid I’m far from it: only to receive a handful turned down whale bone, but damn near lost my cool at elephant tusks.

Let's Go Ibaraki
(茨城に行きましょう。)

Let's start with two of Ibaraki's most popular places, which you might already know. One is, Kairaku-en (偕楽園) located in the city of Mito. It is one of the great three gardens (the other two being Kenrokuen in Kanazawa, Ishikawa prefecture, and Kōraku-en in Okayama, Okayama prefecture). The best time to go is plum blossom season (mid-February to mid-March), when there are 3,000 plum trees in a variety of colors. You can pack a picnic and do a bit of walking around the blossoming season. The Ibaraki line stops right at a special stop right in front of the park, and parking is available. Another place is the second most popular spot Hitachi Seaside Park (日立ひたち海浜公園). It's expansive and great to walk on foot, but if you're not much of a walker you can always rent a bike to get around.

Its main attractions change each season, but I absolutely recommend going in spring, when the park is carpeted with blue nemophila. The fields and fields of this beautiful flower make it all the way through you're in the middle of the ocean. During this time the cafe has blue cups where you can sit and drink coffee. I would say the best time to go is to do not recommend driving to either of these spots in peak season as traffic is a nightmare and parking is crazy. Both are accessible by train and bus, and in peak season a multitude of signs and people will tell you where to go.

Now let's leave Mito and head on the unbeknownst track north. There's one game to play when it comes to traveling to the darkest northwest of Ibaraki via public transportation: the JR Sujun Line. This line connects the towns of Ibaraki, only four cars at most. Since it is a single, countryside track train, it only comes about once an hour, so I highly recommend getting a Suica card when planning your trip. Among the Sujun line's charmingly analog features is the limited Suica card system. You must buy a Suica card to buy a physical ticket. If your Japanese is more hindrance than help, then the easiest option is to exit at Mitō Station and walk to the JR station. If your Japanese is functional, you can switch straight onto the Sujun train at Mitō station, and ask one of the many staff members to help you load your Suica card before reaching your desired stop.

When I first moved to Japan, I was placed in the middle of nowhere in Japan's longest and least populated prefecture, Ibaraki (茨城県). When some of my friends found out where I was placed, they just assumed I was lost. Three years later and I do not regret one part of that experience because it is one that can never be replaced or recreated. In many English travel books, only a quarter of a page is dedicated to Ibaraki. I am here to tell you that Ibaraki is a fantastic place with many hidden gems. Today, I am going to show you why.

Everyone told me the best way to get around Ibaraki is by car—which is true. It is a secret. But I lived three years in this country without a car and was just fine. If you don't have a car, I would suggest buying a bicycle. It is the easiest and most cost-effective option in the country. Google Maps or Apple Maps have a tendency to lead drivers down country roads with cliffs on one side and mountains on the other, so be careful of the cycling routes. Ibaraki is a rural area, so locals tend to take these roads fast and treat one-lane country roads as two-lane roads with plenty of space. I'll show you today how many main highways there are, main roads with shoulders.

Just as a warning before we start, the more you go the more escane English becomes. I recommend having some basic knowledge (read Hiragana and Katakana) before you start. At any rate, just be prepared to get into miscommunication situations, and if you do, just smile and nod. Japanese do live in northern Ibaraki, there aren't many. And if you look a certain way or dress a certain way, you will get stared at, pointed at, or yelled at. But people aren't doing this to see if you're weird; they are doing it out of naivete and curiosity. Students will probably stare at you to see if you are weird. A2

Now that you know all that, sit back, relax and enjoy the ride. When I lived in Ibaraki, I used to take the Shinkansen up to Tokyo every day. You'll pass many cute small villages, and in the fall you'll be able to see the leaves changing color, while in winter the mountains are sometimes capped with snow.

Wellness : What Does Your Foundation for Success Look Like?

What Can You Do to Be Someone Else's Safety Net?

Children are dependent on the trusted adults around them to meet their needs. This puts a different kind of pressure on parents and caregivers alike.

- What can you do as a teacher or staff if you see irregularity in one of your students?
- How do you know when it's actually time to say something?

There is such a thing as too late. If you notice any change or irregularity in a student, teacher, or staff member, please trust yourself to notice and report it to your manager as soon as possible. See guidelines in KA's Child Safeguarding Policy and Sexual Harassment Policy for more details.

The topic of safety and security is highly sensitive and it requires a balanced team, especially in an institutional context. The feeling of safety and security is intertwined with our sense of belonging, emotional experience, and for KA and KAIS alike, urgency, transparency, and nuance are key factors in finding solutions that support the safety and security of our learning community and workplace.

As the common analogy of putting your own oxygen mask on first in case of an emergency on an airplane, we must make sure to check after our own safety first. Here are some high-risk variables that make many of us living abroad experience short-term and/or long-term psychosocial deficiencies:

- Living alone
- Living abroad
- Living away from family
- Not having a social and medical support system set up

We need to look out for one another.

Connecting with a Trusted Health Service Provider

Thanks to the wisdom of the KA community, we have a growing list of health professionals who can speak English in and around Tokyo.

Whether it is for regular check-ups or for a health concern you have been putting off, there is undoubtedly a needed level of comfort in knowing that you can talk to a health professional in a language you feel comfortable in.

Finding a primary care doctor or a sekaiyaku (family doctor) is key in setting up a healthy life for you and your family here in Japan. If you have never been to a doctor in Tokyo or you've been here for over 10 years, having a primary care doctor could mean that they can give you the right connection to a specialist you may need sooner rather than later. If you are not connected to a specialist by having packed by the referral letter they write, you can help keep track of your recurring needs and make sure to bring up any irregularities.

Even if you don't have any standing health concerns, an internal doctor or naka is the general practitioner you would want to build trust with.

Are you set up with a trusted doctor? Please submit a response to the "English-Speaking Service Providers" questionnaire on the dashboard and share with us! Your experience could be the lifeline that a colleague needs now or in the future.
